Fall Festival Of Stars Here On Thursday

The Fall Festival of Stars headlined by the fabulous Jerry Lee Lewis is scheduled to appear at the Murray State Fieldhouse tomorrow at 8 p.m. Appearing with Lewis is an outstanding cast of two Rock and Roll Pop recording artists. Included in the imposing list are the "Gentles", a 7 piece group whose recent recording of "Keep on Dancing" is a smash hit all around the country. Also included are the Willie Mitchell band, Don Bryant, Bobby Wood, "Jumpin'" Gene Simmons of "Haunted House" fame, and Travis Wammack, whose guitar recording of "Scratchy" kept him in the top 10 rating of the record charts for 10 weeks.

Jerry Lee Lewis is one of the most popular entertainers to ever appear in Murray. Credited to be one of the outstanding showmen in the business today, his songs and style appeal to both young and old. In a recent concert in Memphis, Tennessee, he played to 15,000 people and received a standing ovation.

Good tickets are still available at South's Drug Store, Church's Music Shop and on campus at the student Union Building.

Old Man Weather finally took a firm hand last night and brought the Welcome Student Party to a halt, but not before hundreds of Murray State College students did away with hot dogs and cold drinks by the hundreds. Two bands were on hand to provide music and a good time was had by all in spite of the rain which came down in torrents at first, then rained intermittently during the night. The event was the annual welcome party sponsored by the merchants of the city for the students and instructors of the college.

Hearing Is Short As Application For Rest Home Withdrawn

A public hearing was held yesterday at the Murray City Hall by the Murray Board of Zoning Adjustment at 4:00 p.m.

An application had been made by West Kentucky Properties, Inc., of Owensboro to construct a rest home on a lot 200 x 330 feet located just west of Whittell, between Sycamore and Story Avenue.

The hearing was to give residents of the area an opportunity to express an opinion concerning the location of the rest home at this site.

Approximately forty persons who live in the area were present for the hearing. Apparently all of them were against the location of the rest home at this location according to expressions made before the hearing took place.

Board chairman Wells Overby told the large group that he had just received a phone call from James Lassiter, attorney representing West Kentucky Properties, that the firm had withdrawn its application for the rest home. The announcement was greeted with enthusiasm and the hearing was closed.

As a result there was plenty of food left over.

In spite of the rain the students were made to feel they were welcome and that was the main idea.

The Almanac

by United Press International
Today is Wednesday, Sept. 22, the 265th day of 1965 with 100 to follow.

The moon is approaching its new phase.

The morning star is Jupiter.

The evening stars are Venus, Mars and Saturn.

On this day in history:

In 1782, the last person to be executed in the American colonies for witchcraft was hanged.

In 1776, the British hanged American Revolutionary War spy Nathan Hale seconds after he uttered the famous words: "I only regret that I have but one life to lose for my country."

What Makes Hoptown Run? The Coach Says Its Fundamentals

What makes Hoptown run? A big backfield, a bigger line and emphasis on the fundamentals of blocking and tackling.

Hopkinsville has won four consecutive games without even working up a sweat and is firmly entrenched as the No. 1 team in Kentucky according to the UPI Board of Coaches.

There are some dissenters, mostly Louisville area coaches, who say the Tigers haven't played the schedule the bigger city schools have.

"That might be true," Hopkinsville coach Fleming Norton said.

"We are basically a running ball club," he said. "We control the ball and run off 35 to 60 plays a game. That way we can play our type of football."

Norton said the team has about 25 plays but uses only five or six. "We're not very fancy," he said. "We feel if the kids are well versed in the fundamentals they can make these plays work."

Norton refuses to rate his team against the other teams in the state.

"When I look at the team I see all the weaknesses and not the good points," he said. "It's kinda hard to sit in a circle and try to evaluate what's around you."

Norton said about 60 boys reported for pre-season practice and he kept all that wanted to play—making no cuts.

"I think it's wonderful an opportunity for the kids to play football," he said. "We've used at least 40 players in every game we have played so far."

Dear Abby

The Right Viewpoint!

Abigail Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: My husband and I rent our apartment by the year. We travel together quite a lot and therein lies our problem. We are friendly with a married couple I call Henry and Beveda. My husband gives Henry the key to our apartment when we leave town. Now Henry and whenever he entertains them don't show our furniture in any way. They don't drink our liquor or make a disturbance, but I don't like the idea of a married man using our apartment for what I am sure he is using it for. My husband and I see Henry and Beveda socially and I can't look her in the eye. My husband says I am silly to feel that way. Am I?

DEAR GLADYS: No, in handling your apartment, you become a party to whatever goes on there. Tell your husband that you refuse to provide a love nest for a married man. And if the friendship flies out the window, it's okay with you.

DEAR ABBY: Recently my daughter and her husband were separated and then divorced. I have a 16 x 20 picture of my daughter in her wedding gown in my living room. It gives me a lot of pleasure to look at it because I designed and made her wedding gown. It was suggested that I take it down. The groom is not in the picture. What should I do?

DEAR MEMORIES: Put the picture away. If it gives you pleasure to look at it, do so in private. What should I do?

DEAR ABBY: My neighbor just noticed that my three-year-old son is left-handed. We've known it for a long time, but paid no attention to it because it didn't seem to matter. My neighbor says we should break him of being left-handed before it's too late because he will find it a terrible handicap when he grows older. She says her husband is left-handed and it's an awful nuisance. He has to sit at the end of the table when he eats because his arms are always hitting the person to his left. (If it's a round table, he's out of luck.) She says all the machines, tools and appliances are geared for right-handed people and it's awkward for lefties. I have never heard of these drawbacks, but they make sense to me. Should we force our child to use his right hand?

DEAR MRS. M.: The inconvenience of being a southpaw is slight compared with the emotional damage a child is apt to suffer should he be forced to change. For a more detailed explanation of left-handedness, the reasons for it, etc., talk to your pediatrician.

CONFIDENTIAL TO W. W. IN BEVERLY HILLS: You can't always tell by appearance. The "early bird" might have been up all night.

CHAPTER 3 ALTHOUGH John O'Connor knew the Mounts by report, as did all the people of the Dublin area, he was not what he himself would call personally acquainted with them, though old Augustus often nodded to him vaguely at a race meeting or a horse auction. The Mounts seldom sold a horse and never bought one, so they had no occasion to deal with O'Connor, the best in his line in the country.

O'Connor appeared at Mount Hall early the next morning and found Augustus, fresh from breakfast, strolling along beside the lake with bread in his pocket for the swans, the ducks and the huge fat ancient carp. The carp were the talk of the countryside; even O'Connor had heard of them. The peasants called them "monsters."

Augustus did not seem surprised to see the big black-haired Dublin Irishman—in fact, he seemed hardly aware of his presence.

"I'm John O'Connor, sir," O'Connor prompted, a little unsettled by the Old Boy's rather vague look and manner.

"Yes, yes," answered Augustus, not looking at him; then he tossed some bread in the water.

"See him, rise to it. That's Chang. He weighs a good forty pounds."

O'Connor stared at the mammoth fat lazy carp with something like dismay. The peasants were right—a monster, and ugly as the devil himself.

"I often ask myself what would happen to all the beasts of the place if there were no more Mounts around."

"Be gone, sir; they'd disappear," O'Connor was startled into replying. "Wouldn't take the greatest warrior in Ireland to feed them all."

"Ay," growled Augustus, and tossed a great chunk of bread to Chang, who caught it as it fell, then he stepped and turned with a shattering crash of water.

O'Connor stared slightly.

Augustus turned and really looked at him for the first time.

"O'Connor? Horse dealer, eh? What do you want at Mount Hall? We raise our own. Never buy."

"You sometimes sell, though."

"Rarely, and then only as a favor to friends. We breed for use, on a small scale."

"I know, and a miracle it is that, breeding on so small a scale you could have bred a great one like Mickey Free."

Augustus grinned, whether in derision or mere acknowledgment, O'Connor couldn't tell.

"He would make a great stallion for export," hinted O'Connor.

"The Americans are looking for just such a horse."

Augustus turned and regarded him sharply. "Export? To the wilds of goddam America? Mickey Free? Is this why you've come to see me, O'Connor? You should have saved yourself the drive. Mickey Free is as much a part of Mount Hall as our selves."

"I've always heard," O'Connor went on, without hope, not feeling that he should at least make every effort for a chest like General Mayberry. "That there never was a horse without a price."

"It's true, likely," said Augustus, laughing a little. "Mickey Free's price then, shall we say, is twenty thousand pounds, which is near a hundred thousand of American dollars. You asked for a price, man—there it is."

Augustus laughed to himself, and moved down along the border of the lake to feed the shy but dangerous black swans.

O'Connor followed him thoughtfully. A preposterous price. No one would pay it—not even a maharajah. Three thousand pounds on the Irish market would have been excessive.

"That is not a serious price, sir," protested O'Connor. "You are merely joking."

"It is a serious price," declared Augustus. "It is the only price. You are wasting your time. O'Connor."

"As long as I am not wasting yours, sir."

"Oh, mine's of no value. What export Mickey Free?" He chuckled sadly, then talked to the swans.

A short while later, baffled, O'Connor drove thoughtfully back to town.

He lunched at the hotel with General Mayberry and then they went upstairs to the General's suite for a conference.

"It's quite hopeless, I assure you," said O'Connor. "He would not be serious for a moment. The black stallion, sir, and miss, is not for sale."

"But if we could make it."

Yesterday a condemnation suit was tried before the court. The West Fork Clarks River watershed conservancy district brought the suit against James Ransbottom and Wena Ransbottom in an effort to arrive at damages to land in the watershed owned by the couple. The district had offered $2250 and Mr. and Mrs. Ransbottom had asked $4500. The court had placed the figure of $2500 on the damages however the Circuit Court jury found in favor of Mr. and Mrs. Ransbottom.

The couple had not entered suit in the case for the money, but rather the district had entered suit to arrive at a figure for the land. In cases of this nature where a proper price cannot be arrived at, the procedure is for the agency, in this case the Watershed District, to file a condemnation suit in order that a fair price can be arrived at. In the case yesterday two commissioners were appointed by the court to appraise the land. They returned an appraisal of
